KABOBY

90-DAY GROWTH PLAYBOOK

Brand. Digital. Community. Growth.

Prepared for Wadi and the Kabobgy family · Windsor-Essex, Ontario

Prepared by Ovelha Negra

ABOUT THIS DOCUMENT

A working plan, not a report to file away.

This playbook sets out a 90-day programme to turn Kabobgy's greatest assets — twenty-five years of history, genuinely good Syrian and Lebanese food, and a loyal Windsor–Essex following — into a brand and digital system that reliably brings new customers in and brings existing ones back. It was written specifically for Kabobgy's three locations and for the decisions the family faces right now.

Every recommendation is marked DO NOW, DO NEXT, TEST or LATER. Where real data does not yet exist, the plan says so — nothing in this document relies on invented numbers.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Kabobgy is not selling kabobs.

It is selling home, comfort, family, authenticity and community — and it has been doing so for roughly twenty-five years. That emotional core is the most defensible asset the business owns, and it is currently almost invisible online.

Today, the Kabobgy name is split across multiple websites and online identities. Addresses and hours are inconsistent from one property to another, mobile experiences are weak, and social channels post irregularly. The result is that conflicting digital signals weaken local search clarity and authority, and the digital traffic the brand earns is dispersed instead of compounding.

The market itself is favourable. Kabobgy's trade area holds over 420,000 people and is growing faster than the national average — LaSalle alone grew 8.4% between the last two censuses. Windsor–Essex is also home to Canada's highest metropolitan share of Arab residents (6.2% of the population), a community for whom Kabobgy's food is not exotic but familiar.

The central recommendation

Consolidate Kabobgy into one master digital brand — one website, one name, one story — with strong individual pages for LaSalle, Tecumseh and Windsor (Lauzon), then build a repeatable system of local SEO, short-form content, creator partnerships, community presence and measurement around it. The new website is the foundation of that system, not the engine. The engine is everything this playbook wraps around it.

The plan is sequenced over 90 days: fix the foundations in the first two weeks, launch publicly in weeks three and four, amplify through creators and community in the second month, and use the third month to cut what is not working and reinforce what is.

What this programme is designed to change

Today	In 90 days
Multiple sites and identities competing for the same searches	One kabobgy.ca master brand with location pages for LaSalle, Tecumseh and Lauzon
Inconsistent addresses, hours and phone numbers across the web	One verified, identical set of business facts everywhere Google looks
Occasional, ad-hoc social posting	A weekly content system: 3 feed posts, 2-4 reels, stories when something real happens
The 25-year family story untold online	A filmed Kabobgy story running on the website, Instagram and TikTok
No structured review generation	A table-to-QR-to-Google review process with owner responses
No baseline numbers	A one-page owner dashboard measured weekly from day one

How priorities are marked throughout this document

DO NOW	Weeks 1–2. Foundation work; everything else depends on it.
DO NEXT	Weeks 3–6. Launch and early amplification.
TEST	Run small, measure honestly, scale only what works.
LATER	Worth doing — after the system is running.

A note on honesty

No tactic in this playbook is guaranteed to increase revenue. Each one is designed to increase discovery, conversion or repeat visits, and each is paired with a measurement so Kabobgy knows within weeks whether it is working. Measure before scaling — always.

The Opportunity

Kabobgy already has what most restaurants spend fortunes trying to fake.

Twenty-five years of continuous operation. Food cooked over real fire from family recipes. Three locations across Windsor–Essex. Owners who are genuinely from the culture whose food they serve. A customer base that already loves the product — the dining rooms prove it.

What Kabobgy does not yet have is a digital presence that matches the quality of the restaurant. That gap is the opportunity: closing it does not require reinventing the business, only making the existing business easier to discover, easier to understand, easier to choose and easier to return to.

Four gaps, four levers

DISCOVERY

People searching 'shawarma near me' or 'best kabob Windsor' should find Kabobgy first. Local SEO and a clean Google Business Profile for each location make that happen.

DESIRE

Food sells through the eyes. Consistent short-form video and photography — real fire, real cutting, real plates — turns discovery into hunger.

DECISION

A mobile-first site with one-tap call, directions, menu and ordering removes every obstacle between hunger and a visit.

DEVOTION

Reviews, retention offers, catering and experiences turn one visit into a habit — and a habit into advocacy.

The strategic bet: in a market of 420,000 people where the family's own community is the largest racialized group, an authentic 25-year-old restaurant brand that finally shows up properly online should win a disproportionate share of local food discovery. The next 30 pages describe exactly how — and how to measure whether it is working.

SECTION 02

Market Analysis: Windsor-Essex

A growing region, a concentrated trade area, and three well-placed locations.

Kabobgy's three locations sit in a census metropolitan area of 422,630 people (Statistics Canada, 2021 Census) covering Windsor, LaSalle, Tecumseh, Lakeshore, Amherstburg, Essex, Kingsville and Leamington. The three restaurants effectively bracket the urban core: LaSalle to the southwest, Lauzon to the east, and Manning Road on the Tecumseh side.

The community advantage

In the 2021 Census, the Arab community was the largest racialized group in Windsor CMA — 25,885 people, or 6.2% of the population — the highest share of any metropolitan area in Canada, ahead even of Montréal. For a large part of Kabobgy's home market, shawarma, kafta and fattoush are not a food trend; they are dinner.

ARAB SHARE OF POPULATION BY METRO – 2021 CENSUS

This cuts two ways, and the strategy must respect both:

- The community audience judges authenticity hard and rewards it with fierce loyalty, family-size orders, catering for weddings and community events, and word of mouth inside networks advertising cannot reach.
- The broader Windsor–Essex audience — the other 94% — is an under-served growth market. For them, Kabobgy's job is to make Syrian and Lebanese food feel welcoming, explained and easy to order for the first time.

What this means for the plan

Content and outreach should run on two tracks: authenticity signals for the community (language, dishes, halal clarity where verified, cultural moments) and approachability signals for everyone else ('what is shish tawook?', 'how to order', 'what to try first'). Same brand, two doors in.

Demand context & competitive frame

Windsor–Essex has a deep bench of Middle Eastern restaurants — a consequence of exactly the demographics that make the market attractive. Competing on 'we also sell shawarma' is a losing game. Kabobgy's defensible positions are different:

- Longevity. Roughly 25 years in business is a trust signal almost no competitor can copy. It belongs in the brand line, the website, the walls and the Google profiles.
- Multi-location convenience. Three locations means 'there's a Kabobgy near me' is true for most of the urban area — once the brand stops hiding it.
- A real family and a real chef. Wadi and the family are the story. Faceless competitors cannot compete with a person customers recognize.
- Fresh, made-to-order positioning. Bowls, salads and grilled-to-order kabobs align with how people increasingly want to eat — fresh and fast without being fast food.

What we do not yet know – and will establish in weeks 1-2

Question	Source	Status
Sales by location, daypart and menu item	POS export	Data required
Current Google profile views, calls, direction requests	Google Business Profile insights	Data required
Current website sessions and top pages	Analytics (to be installed)	Data required
Search queries already finding Kabobgy	Google Search Console	Data required
Review count / average rating per location	Google profiles audit	Week-1 audit
Competitor ratings, price points, delivery presence	Structured competitor scan	Week-1 audit

Principle: this playbook deliberately avoids invented market sizes and revenue projections. The baseline audit in days 1–14 replaces guesses with Kabobgy's own numbers, and every later decision is made against them.

Search Landscape & Analytics

Restaurant demand in 2026 is captured or lost on a phone screen, usually within a minute.

Most restaurant discovery now happens through Google Search and Maps — and for 'near me' searches, Google shows a local pack of three businesses before anything else. Being in that pack for the right searches, in each of the three trade areas, is the single most valuable digital real estate available to Kabobgy.

THE FOUR SEARCH INTENTS KABOBGY MUST OWN

Intent	Example searches	Where it is won
Brand	kabobgy · kabobgy menu · kabobgy lasalle hours	One website; correct profiles; no competing Kabobgy properties
Category, near me	shawarma near me · kabob lasalle · halal food windsor*	Google Business Profiles, reviews, photos, categories
Comparison	best middle eastern restaurant windsor · best shawarma tecumseh	Review volume and rating; creator and press mentions
Occasion	catering windsor · lebanese catering · cooking class windsor	Dedicated catering and experience pages with clear calls to action

Use halal-related terms only once halal status is verified – see Section 13.*

SEARCH VOLUMES: TO BE ESTABLISHED, NOT GUESSED

Exact local search volumes for these terms will be pulled from Google Keyword Planner and Search Console during the week-1 baseline (data required). What matters strategically is not the precise number but the structure above: brand searches must never leak to the wrong website, and category searches are won at the profile level, not the website level.

The danger of mixed signals

When Google sees the same restaurant name attached to different websites, addresses and phone numbers, it cannot be confident which is authoritative. Conflicting digital signals weaken local search clarity and authority — which in practice means fewer local-pack appearances for every location. Fixing this costs nothing but discipline, and it is the first job of the 90 days.

The analytics stack: small, free, sufficient

Kabobgy does not need enterprise tooling. Four free instruments, installed once in week one, give the owners everything this plan measures:

Tool	What it tells Kabobgy	Cadence
Google Business Profile insights	Profile views, calls, direction requests and website taps – per location. The closest thing to a footfall meter for search.	Weekly
Google Search Console	Which queries show kabobgy.ca, impressions, clicks, and indexing problems – including whether old/duplicate properties still appear.	Weekly
Website analytics (GA4 or similar)	Sessions, top pages, mobile share, and taps on call / directions / order buttons – the site's real conversions.	Weekly
Meta & TikTok native insights	Reach, views, saves, shares and follower growth per post – which content pillars actually travel.	Weekly

Baseline scorecard – completed in days 1-14, then tracked weekly

Metric (per location)	Baseline	Day 45	Day 90
Google profile views / month	Data required	–	–
Direction requests / month	Data required	–	–
Calls from profile / month	Data required	–	–
Google reviews (count · avg rating)	Data required	–	–
Website sessions / month (mobile %)	Data required	–	–
Order / call / directions taps on site	Data required	–	–
Instagram + TikTok reach / month	Data required	–	–

DO NOW

Install all four tools and capture the baseline before anything launches — otherwise the 90-day review has nothing to compare against.

The Core Strategic Idea

"More Than Kabobs."

Every strategic choice in this playbook flows from one idea: what Kabobgy actually sells is not on the menu.

A shawarma is available on every second corner of Windsor. A quarter-century family restaurant where the owner cuts the meat himself, where the recipes came over with the family, and where regulars are greeted by name — that is scarce. The strategy is to put that scarcity on camera, on the website, and into every profile and post.

In practice, “More Than Kabobs” means three disciplines:

- Show people, not just plates. Wadi, the brothers, the staff, the regulars. Faces build the trust that food photos alone cannot.
- Tell the 25-year story relentlessly. Founding, migration, recipes, growth to three locations. History is Kabobgy's moat.
- Behave like a neighbour, not an advertiser. Community presence, honest reviews, genuine content — the brand should feel local because it is.

On taglines

Directions such as “Authentic. Fresh. Delicious.” and “Real Food. Real Fire. Real Family.” both fit this positioning. Neither should be finalized in a document — the right move is a short working session with the owners to choose language the family will actually say out loud, then apply it everywhere at once.

The Current Digital Problem

Nothing is wrong with the restaurant. Plenty is wrong with how the internet sees it.

The audit behind this playbook found a pattern familiar to family businesses that grew organically: each digital property was created for a good reason at the time, and nobody was ever responsible for the whole picture.

Brand fragmentation

Multiple websites and online identities represent “Kabobgy”, pointing to different locations (e.g. Tecumseh vs LaSalle). Customers — and Google — cannot tell which is the real front door.

Inconsistent business facts

Addresses, hours and phone numbers differ between properties and directories. Every inconsistency is a reason for Google to trust the listings less and for a customer to drive to a wrong door.

Weak local SEO signals

Thin location content, missing structured data, unclaimed or under-optimized profiles, and no review-generation process.

Mobile experience

Existing properties were not built mobile-first, yet nearly all restaurant discovery happens on phones.

Dormant social presence

Posting is irregular and mostly promotional. The fire, the cutting, the family — the content people actually share — is absent.

The untold story

Twenty-five years of history is nowhere online. A first-time visitor has no way to know Kabobgy is not a two-year-old franchise.

None of these is expensive to fix. All of them are fixed inside the first 30 days of this plan — most inside the first 14.

Recommended Brand Architecture

One Kabobgy. Three doors. Every location stronger together.

The family's core decision: keep marketing each location independently, or unite behind a single master brand. Our recommendation — provided the owners agree on governance — is one Kabobgy digital identity with dedicated location pages beneath it.

Each location keeps its own:

- Google Business Profile
- Phone number & address
- Opening hours
- Menu & order links
- Location-specific reviews
- Local SEO content

All of it reinforces one brand. Every review earned in Tecumseh, every reel filmed in LaSalle and every backlink to kabobgy.ca now builds authority for all three locations instead of splitting it three ways.

The honest trade-offs

	A · Independent marketing	B · One master brand (recommended)
Search authority	Split across properties; each site fights alone for rankings	Reviews, links and content compound on one domain
Cost & effort	Three websites, three content streams, three ad budgets	One site, one content system, shared assets
Customer clarity	Confusing: which Kabobgy is 'real'? Which menu applies?	One brand; the nearest door is obvious
Family autonomy	Each owner fully controls their own marketing	Requires agreed governance: who approves what, who pays for what
Risk	Continued signal conflict; the brand never compounds	A family disagreement can stall shared assets – governance must come first

Governance before graphics

Ownership of the domain and trademarks, cost-sharing, content approval and what happens if a location is sold should be documented before the unified brand launches. These are legal and financial matters between family members: they belong with an appropriate lawyer and accountant, not with a marketing agency. Ovelha Negra's role is to make the digital architecture ready for whichever agreement the family reaches.

DO NOW

Hold the family decision meeting in week one. Every other workstream in this playbook — site structure, profiles, content, creators — depends on the answer.

LATER

If a second brand or sub-concept ever emerges (e.g. a catering-only kitchen), revisit this architecture — do not bolt it on ad hoc.

The Mobile-First Customer Journey

A hungry person on a phone gives you about a minute. Design for that minute.

Restaurant purchases are impulsive and local. Someone sees a reel of meat hitting the grill at 5:40 pm, checks how far away you are, glances at the menu, and either taps Call / Directions / Order — or drifts to the next option. Every unnecessary click, outdated hour or dead link leaks customers at the exact moment they were ready.

Stage	Where it happens	Kabobgy must provide
Discover	Google/Maps, Instagram, TikTok, word of mouth	Local-pack presence, active profiles, shareable video
Crave	Photos & short-form video	Real fire, real cutting, real plates – updated weekly
Choose	Google profile · kabobgy.ca on a phone	Correct hours, prices, distance; menu readable in two thumbs
Order / Visit	One tap	Call, directions and order buttons above the fold on every page
Review	Google, prompted at the table	QR ask after great experiences; owner replies to every review
Return	SMS/email list, offers, new dishes	A reason to come back within 30 days – see Section 17

The one-minute test

Once the new site is live, the owners should run this monthly: stand in a parking lot, search “shawarma near me”, and time how long it takes to get from the search box to driving directions. If it is more than 60 seconds or four taps, something has broken. This test costs nothing and catches more revenue leaks than any report.

Website & Local SEO

The site is the foundation. The Google Business Profiles are the storefront.

For a local restaurant, the three Google Business Profiles will be seen far more often than the website itself. They must be treated as owned media, maintained weekly — not set-and-forget listings.

Google Business Profile programme – per location

Task	Detail	Priority
Claim & verify all three profiles	One owner account with family access; remove any duplicate or legacy listings	DO NOW
Identical NAP everywhere	Name, Address, Phone must match kabobgy.ca exactly – LaSalle: 2055 Sandwich West Pkwy · Tecumseh: 13300 Tecumseh Rd E · Lauzon: 7755 Tecumseh Rd E	DO NOW
Categories & attributes	Primary: Middle Eastern restaurant; secondary: Lebanese, Syrian*, takeout, catering; mark dine-in / takeout / delivery attributes	DO NOW
Hours – including holidays	Wrong hours are the fastest way to a one-star review	DO NOW
20+ current photos per profile	Dishes, interior, exterior, team – refreshed monthly from the content system	DO NEXT
Weekly Google posts	Specials, new dishes, events – reuse social content; drop if insights show no traction	TEST
Q&A section seeded	Answer the real questions: parking, halal status (once verified), catering, kids menu	DO NEXT

Use the category set Google offers; exact names vary.*

Eliminating the old signals

Legacy websites and duplicate listings should be retired deliberately: 301-redirect old domains to the matching page on kabobgy.ca, mark duplicate Google listings as moved/closed, and correct the major directories (Apple Maps, Bing, Yelp, TripAdvisor, delivery apps). This single cleanup usually does more for local visibility than any amount of new content.

kabobgy.ca – technical & content checklist

- Location pages for /lasalle, /tecumseh, /lauzon — each with its own address, hours, phone, embedded map, photos and reviews snippet
- Restaurant structured data (schema.org Restaurant + Menu) so Google can read menus, hours and locations directly
- Menu as readable text, not a PDF or image — with prices
- Page titles & meta descriptions written per page: “Kabobgy LaSalle — Syrian & Lebanese Grill” beats “Home”
- One-tap actions — call, directions, order — sticky on mobile
- Mobile performance: compressed images, fast load on cellular
- Search Console verified, sitemap submitted, indexing checked monthly; old domains 301-redirected
- Analytics events on call / directions / order taps
- Local backlinks: Windsor–Essex food guides, chamber of commerce, community organizations, event sponsors — earned steadily, never bought
- The story page — the 25-year history with real photographs (see Section 11)

What good looks like by day 90

Signal	Target state
Local pack	Kabobgy appears for its brand and core category searches in each location's immediate trade area (tracked from week 2)
Business facts	Zero conflicting addresses, hours or phones anywhere Google reads
Indexing	Only kabobgy.ca indexed; legacy properties redirected
Reviews	Steady weekly flow of new Google reviews with owner responses (volume target set after week-1 audit)

DO NOW

Launch checklist above is part of the site go-live, not an after-thought. A beautiful site that Google cannot read is a brochure in a drawer.

The Content & Social Engine

A repeatable weekly system — not a heroic effort that dies in week three.

The goal is a cadence the restaurant can sustain during a Friday rush month after month. Phones, good light and honesty beat production value: the content that fills restaurants is genuine, not polished.

3 feed posts / week photo or carousel	2-4 reels or TikToks / week 15-40 seconds, vertical	STORIES whenever real rush hour, prep, people

Nine content pillars

FOOD the plates, the sauces, the bread	FIRE / COOKING grill, skewers, shawarma cone	PEOPLE Wadi, brothers, staff
FAMILY the family behind the counter	HISTORY 25 years, old photos, milestones	CUSTOMERS reactions, regulars, favourites
COMMUNITY events, sponsorships, neighbours	EDUCATION what is shish tawook? how to eat mezze	BEHIND THE SCENES prep, deliveries, opening up

The operating rule

Batch it: one 90-minute filming session per week — usually during prep, before opening — yields all week's material. Whoever runs the account spends 20 minutes a day posting and replying. If a week gets crazy, the cadence drops, not the honesty.

Twenty ideas Kabobgy can film this month

Each idea below is a complete post. None needs a script, an agency or more than a phone on a $30 tripod.

- Cutting the shawarma cone — the number-one performing restaurant clip format
- Kafta hitting the grill, sound on — fire and sizzle, no music needed
- Wadi explains one dish in 30 seconds: what it is, how it's eaten
- “What makes Syrian kabob different?” — education pillar
- Making hummus from scratch, start to finish, time-lapsed
- A family recipe story: where the spice mix came from
- A regular's honest reaction to their usual order
- The lunch rush from behind the counter, sped up
- Staff introduction: name, role, favourite item on the menu
- “What Wadi actually eats after a 12-hour shift”
- Catering order for 40 being packed, with the checklist visible
- One spice, explained: sumac — what it is, what it does
- Old Kabobgy photograph next to the same corner today
- 60-second cooking lesson: how to grill kabob without drying it
- Customer favourite of the week, chosen from comments
- Fattoush being built layer by layer — the colour does the work
- The first pita of the morning coming off the line
- “Three things to order if it's your first time at Kabobgy”
- Asking customers: LaSalle, Tecumseh or Lauzon — which is yours?
- Closing time: chairs up, lights off, “see you tomorrow, Windsor”

DO NEXT

Start the cadence the same week the site launches, so new visitors find a live brand, not a museum.

TEST

After 30 days, keep the two pillars with the best reach and saves; post more of those, less of the rest. The insights tab decides, not taste.

Local Creator Programme

Not celebrity endorsement — borrowed trust from people Windsor already follows.

A pilot with 5–10 Windsor–Essex and regional food creators puts authentic third-party video in front of local audiences at a fraction of advertising cost. The objective is discovery and social proof; any follower growth is a bonus.

Pilot element	Recommendation
Who	Micro-creators (roughly 2k-50k local followers) who genuinely cover food; relevance beats reach
Offer	A hosted meal experience for two, or agreed fair compensation — disclosed per Canadian ad-disclosure norms
Ask	Honest coverage in their own voice; no scripts. Agree in advance whether Kabobgy may reuse the content, and on what terms
Timing	Waves of 2–3 creators across weeks 5–8, so each wave's lessons shape the next
Tracking	Reach & views · profile visits · website sessions · direction requests · promo-code redemptions (if used) · follower growth · any measurable sales lift

Outreach note – adapt per creator

Hi [name] — I'm [/we're] reaching out from Kabobgy, the Syrian–Lebanese grill that's been part of Windsor–Essex for about 25 years (LaSalle, Tecumseh and Lauzon Rd). We love how you cover local food. We'd like to host you for a full tasting at whichever location suits you — no script, no obligations: if you enjoy it and choose to share, wonderful. If helpful we can have owner-chef Wadi walk you through the menu and the grill. Would [two date options] work?

TEST

Creator marketing is a test by definition: run the pilot, compare each creator's tracked results against cost, and only then decide on an ongoing programme. No guarantees — that is the point of piloting.

The Kabobgy Story

Twenty-five years is the one thing no competitor can copy by Friday.

The single highest-leverage content asset in this entire plan is a 2–3 minute film of the family telling Kabobgy's story — professionally shot if budget allows, or filmed well on a modern phone if not. It runs on the website's story page, pinned on Instagram and TikTok, on the Google profiles, and cut into 15-second fragments for months of posts.

The questions the film answers

- How did Kabobgy begin — and what did the first day look like?
- What food did the brothers grow up with, and who taught them?
- Why open a restaurant in Windsor–Essex, and why this food?
- What does Syrian and Lebanese cooking mean to the family?
- How did one restaurant become three?
- What should a customer feel when they walk in?

DIRECTION FOR THE FILM

No corporate voice-over, no stock music swells. The brothers at the grill and at a family table, talking. Hands, fire, bread, old photographs. Subtitled for sound-off viewing. If a viewer finishes it and thinks “I want to eat where that family cooks” — it worked.

- Gather first: old photographs, the original sign, early menus — digitize everything before the shoot.
- Shoot once, use everywhere: capture extra b-roll (grill, prep, dining room) the content system reuses for months.
- Put history on the walls too: a framed timeline in each location turns every waiting customer into a story reader.

DO NEXT

Schedule the shoot in weeks 3–4, after photography for the site is done — same day if practical, to share costs.

Community Strategy

A 25-year-old family restaurant is already community infrastructure. Act like it.

Community work is not a marketing tactic wearing a costume. Done honestly, it deepens the loyalty that already exists and introduces Kabobgy to people no ad reaches. Done cynically, it reads instantly as exploitation. The rule: participate first, publicize second — and modestly.

Where Kabobgy fits naturally

- Youth sports & schools — team meal sponsorships in LaSalle and Tecumseh; jerseys feed families literally and figuratively
- Local events — a grill presence at festivals and markets across Windsor–Essex
- Food security — partnerships with food banks or community kitchens; meals, not just cheques
- Newcomer organizations — few gestures land like a familiar meal in an unfamiliar country
- Cultural organizations — Arab and broader cultural associations, events and celebrations
- Neighbourhood groups — the small, unglamorous sponsorships that neighbours actually notice
- Campus life — student groups and events at the university and college (also future catering clients)
- Fundraiser plates — a named dish for a month with proceeds to a local cause, told transparently

A direction worth developing

“The community feeds Kabobgy; Kabobgy feeds the community.” Not proposed as an official slogan — but as a lens, it should shape which initiatives the family says yes to, and how those stories are told: with gratitude, never with a megaphone.

TEST

Pick ONE initiative in the first 90 days, do it properly, and measure what it produces (mentions, new faces, catering enquiries) before adding more.

The Halal Market Opportunity

Potentially significant — and only worth pursuing with complete honesty.

Windsor–Essex's large Arab community overlaps substantially with a Muslim customer base for whom halal status is not a preference but a requirement. Many will simply never consider a restaurant whose halal position is unclear. Clarity — in either direction — is worth real money and costs mostly diligence.

First, verify. Then — and only then — communicate.

Kabobgy must not describe itself as halal unless the food and the supply chain genuinely qualify, verified with suppliers and, if pursued, a recognized certification body. If certification is achieved, state it clearly and specifically (which items, which locations). If it is not pursued, answer customer questions honestly and never imply otherwise. Trust destroyed here does not come back.

If verified, the playbook is straightforward

- State halal status plainly on kabobgy.ca, all three Google profiles (attributes and Q&A), menus and door signage
- Introduce the restaurant to nearby mosques and Muslim community organizations — respectfully, in person, as neighbours
- Reach student populations (Muslim student associations) with catering and group-meal offers, especially around Ramadan and Eid
- Consider iftar-season family platters and community-event catering — planned with people from the community, not merely aimed at them
- Welcome newcomer families: familiar food, clearly labelled, fairly priced

DO NEXT

Complete supplier verification and decide the certification question inside the 90 days — the answer shapes menus, signage and outreach.

LATER

Formal community partnerships and seasonal programmes follow once status is settled and communicated.

Workshops & Experiences

Wadi is a chef. Quiet Tuesdays are a stage waiting for him.

Paid cooking experiences convert the quietest hours into revenue, marketing and loyalty at once: attendees film everything, post it voluntarily, and leave feeling like friends of the house. Formats worth testing:

- “Learn Syrian Cooking with Chef Wadi” — the flagship kabob workshop
- Hummus & mezze class — lower prep, great for beginners
- Family Syrian dinner class — cook together, then eat together
- Couples' cooking evening — date-night positioning, gift-friendly
- Corporate team-building sessions — daytime, premium-priced, invoiced

TYPICAL WEEKLY DEMAND SHAPE (ILLUSTRATIVE)

ILLUSTRATIVE EXAMPLE ONLY – a typical quick-service weekly pattern, not Kabobgy data. Kabobgy's own POS baseline will identify the true quiet windows.

Pilot design – “Learn Syrian Cooking with Chef Wadi”

Element	Concept
Duration	2.5 hours, one quiet weekday evening (per POS data)
Structure	Welcome mezze › technique demo (marinade, skewering, fire) › hands-on cooking › everyone eats what they made › recipe card to take home
Capacity	8-12 guests – small enough for real attention
Pricing	Premium experience pricing, benchmarked against local cooking classes; exact price set after food-cost review (data required)
Food cost	Calculated with the accountant before pricing; class uses ingredients already in the restaurant's supply chain to limit waste
Promotion	Announced through the content system, the email/SMS list and in-restaurant signage; gift vouchers offered from day one

TEST

Run two pilot sessions in month two. Full at a fair price › make it monthly. Half-empty › adjust format or channel once, then decide.

Menu Engineering

The menu is a portfolio. Manage it like one.

Every item on Kabobgy's menu occupies a position on two axes: how often it sells, and how much each sale actually contributes after ingredients. Four categories fall out of that simple picture — and each has its own correct move.

ILLUSTRATIVE EXAMPLE ONLY – positions are fictional, not Kabobgy actual data

To classify the real menu, the owners need per-item data assembled once and refreshed quarterly: selling price · ingredient cost · gross contribution · units sold · prep time · waste · perishability · labour intensity · strategic importance (some items earn their place by bringing families in, whatever their margin). Most of this comes from the POS export plus one honest afternoon with the accountant.

A worked example of the analysis

ILLUSTRATIVE EXAMPLE – NOT KABOBGY ACTUAL DATA. All figures below are fictional, chosen only to show the arithmetic and the kinds of decisions that follow.

Item (fictional data)	Price	Cost	Contrib.	Units	Class	Possible move
Chicken shawarma wrap	$12	$4.00	$8.00	310	Star	Feature everywhere; protect quality
Shish tawook dinner	$23	$8.50	$14.50	140	Star	Lead item in photos & ads
Falafel wrap	$10	$4.80	$5.20	180	Plowhorse	Test +$0.50; bundle with soup
Mixed grill platter	$34	$13.00	$21.00	35	Puzzle	Rename, photograph, place top-right of menu
Veggie grape leaves	$7	$2.60	$4.40	28	Puzzle	Attach to mezze bundle
Lentil soup	$6	$2.10	$3.90	22	Dog	Keep as winter item only – low waste, has fans

The standing recommendations

- Promote high-contribution stars in every photo, reel and Google post
- Reprice selected plowhorses in small steps; watch units, not opinions
- Give puzzles one honest chance – better name, better photo, better placement – before judging them
- Retire or seasonalize dogs without sentimentality (unless strategically important)
- Design menu placement deliberately: eyes land top-right first
- Bundle intelligently: family platters and lunch combos raise average ticket with items already in prep
- Watch portion cost and ingredient duplication – fewer unique ingredients, less waste
- Track perishability: items that force daily waste must earn it in contribution

DO NEXT

Assemble the real item-level table in weeks 5–6 from POS data with the accountant; implement the first menu changes by day 60 and re-measure at day 90.

Catering

The highest-ticket product Kabobgy sells — and the least visible online.

Catering orders are worth dozens of walk-ins each, they can be scheduled into quiet capacity, and Middle Eastern food happens to be built for feeding groups. The fix is visibility and packaging, not new capability.

Package the offer – don't make buyers assemble it

An office manager with a budget and 25 people to feed should not have to build an order item by item. Publish clear packages (prices set by the owners after the menu-costing exercise — data required):

Package	Feeds	Shape of the offer
Gathering	10	Choice of two mains, rice, fattoush, hummus, pita, garlic dip
Celebration	20	Three mains, two salads, two dips, dessert option
Feast	40	Full spread: mixed grill, shawarma, mezze table, dessert
Custom event	Any	Weddings, corporate & community events — quoted individually

Who to put it in front of

- Business lunches: offices, medical and dental clinics, law and accounting firms across Windsor–Essex
- University and college events, student associations, staff functions
- Schools, teams and construction crews — volume orders on repeat schedules
- Family milestones: weddings, graduations, memorials — where the community already trusts Kabobgy
- Cultural and community organizations (see Sections 12–13)

The system behind it

A /catering page with packages, photos, lead-time and one form or phone number · catering highlighted on all Google profiles · a monthly reel of a real order being packed · every catering client added to the retention list with a scheduled six-month follow-up.

DO NEXT

Catering page live with the site launch; first 20 direct outreach emails/visits to local offices in month two.

Retention & Reviews

It is far cheaper to bring a happy customer back than to buy a stranger's first visit.

Retention system

- Build the list: collect email/SMS at the counter, on wifi and at checkout — with clear consent, honouring Canada's anti-spam law (CASL): express opt-in, identify the sender, unsubscribe in every message
- Loyalty: start simple (physical or digital stamp card — e.g. 10th wrap on the house) before considering an app
- Birthday offers and occasional members-only specials or preview dishes — reasons to open the message
- Catering reminders: every past catering client contacted before predictable seasons (holidays, graduation, Ramadan/Eid where appropriate)
- Win-back: a simple “we miss you” offer to list members silent for 60+ days
- Segment later: once the list has real volume, separate families / lunch regulars / catering buyers — not before

Review engine

Staff ask only after visibly great experiences — a compliment, a cleared family platter, a regular's third visit that week. The QR goes straight to the location's Google review link. The owner (or one designated person) answers every review, good and bad, within a week: politely, personally, without arguing.

Non-negotiable

Ask for honest reviews, from everyone, always. Never incentivize positive reviews, never gate negative ones, never buy reviews. Beyond the ethics, review platforms detect these patterns — and the penalty is paid in exactly the visibility this plan is building.

DO NEXT

Review engine live at launch. List-building starts week 3; first retention message only when the list clears ~200 contacts.

The Owner's Dashboard

One page, once a week, fifteen minutes. If it needs more, it's wrong.

Wadi should not drown in analytics. The dashboard holds a dozen numbers that answer three questions: are more people finding us, are they coming in, and are they coming back?

Business (weekly, from POS)	Digital (weekly)	Programmes (monthly)
Revenue by location	Google profile views	Creator campaign results vs cost
Transactions / orders	Direction requests & calls	Catering leads & bookings
Average ticket	Website sessions (mobile %)	Workshop fill rate
Top & bottom menu items	Order/call/direction taps	List size & message performance
Waste log	New reviews & average rating	Community initiative outcomes
Repeat-customer indicator (loyalty redemptions or list activity)	Instagram + TikTok reach

Vanity vs. business metrics

Vanity (nice, not decisive)	Business (decides what we do)
Follower count	Direction requests, calls, orders
Likes on a reel	Profile views that became visits (measured by taps)
Total impressions	Average ticket and repeat rate
"Going viral" outside Windsor-Essex	Reach inside the trade area

Followers alone do not matter if restaurant traffic does not increase. Every tactic in this playbook is judged by the middle column of the dashboard: people through the doors and dollars through the till.

DO NOW The dashboard template is created in week one, when the baseline is captured — a simple spreadsheet is enough.

How to read days 61-90

The third month exists to make the second quarter cheaper and sharper. By day 90 the family should know — from its own dashboard, not from anyone's opinion — which three tactics earned their keep, what a new review is worth, and where the next dollar of marketing effort should go.

Owners used in this roadmap

Wadi · Kabobgy Management (the owners jointly) · Ovelha Negra · Staff · Photographer/Creator · Accountant/POS Data · External Professional (legal / certification). Legal, trademark, financial and certification matters sit with the appropriate professionals throughout — never with the marketing workstream.

The 10 Things To Do Next

If this playbook were one page, it would be this one.

- 1 Decide whether Kabobgy operates under one master digital brand
The family meeting that unlocks everything else.
- 2 Correct every location and address signal online
One truth for Google: name, address, phone, hours.
- 3 Launch the mobile-first website
kabobgy.ca with /lasalle, /tecumseh, /lauzon and one-tap actions.
- 4 Optimize all three Google Business Profiles
Categories, photos, hours, Q&A — maintained weekly.
- 5 Create the Kabobgy family story
Film it once; use it everywhere for a year.
- 6 Establish the repeatable short-form content system
3 posts, 2–4 reels a week. Real fire, real people.
- 7 Run a small local creator campaign
5–10 Windsor–Essex food creators, tracked honestly.
- 8 Analyze menu profitability and perishability
Stars, plowhorses, puzzles, dogs — then act.
- 9 Test one community initiative and one revenue experiment
One sponsorship done well; one workshop pilot.
- 10 Measure for 90 days, then adjust
The dashboard decides quarter two — not habit, not hope.

Items 1–4: DO NOW. Items 5–8: DO NEXT. Items 9–10: TEST & MEASURE.

THE LAST WORD

Kabobgy already has the hardest things to manufacture:
history, authentic food, personality, and a community around it.

The next stage is not to reinvent Kabobgy.

It is to make the business easier to discover, easier to understand, easier to choose — and easier to return to.

90 DAYS.
ONE BRAND.
ONE SYSTEM.
MEASURE EVERYTHING.
